

Dr. Lynn Black is passionate about ensuring that those in service to others have the opportunity to achieve wellbeing for themselves and their organizations while negotiating the myriad stressors that lead to individual and organizational trauma so present in today's workplaces.

Dr. Black received her master's degree in Public Health Policy and her medical degree at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Her residency was completed at The New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center. She is currently on the clinical staff of the Department of Medicine at Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) and is an Assistant Professor at Harvard Medical School. Her clinical practice has been in internal medicine, emergency medicine and disaster medicine. Prior to medical school, she received a Bachelor of Science in Nursing.

She has been widely recognized for her leadership and contributions in clinical practice, public health, hospital administration, and nonprofit growth and leadership. Working with academic institutions, governmental and non-governmental organizations, she had been recognized for her expertise in provider, survivor, and community resiliency in complex humanitarian disasters.

Her training includes Group Coaching, Improving Partnerships, Teamwork and Collaborations, and Mindful Physician Leadership, and she is engaged with the Massachusetts General Hospital Benson-Henry Institute for Mind-Body Medicine Stress Management and Resiliency Training (SMART). She is a faculty coach for the Massachusetts General Hospital Office of Physician Wellness.

She has had numerous speaking engagements and workshops on a breadth of leadership and coaching topics, including Resilience, Group Coaching, Leadership during Uncertain Times, and Coaching Skills for Leaders.
